At least 30 refugees, who were deported on 27.06. and 28.06.23, have meanwhile reached the area controlled by Turkish forces in Afrin, north-west of Aleppo. According to media reports, the refugees were deported to the town of Jindires in the Afrin area via the Al-Hamam border crossing on the Syrian-Turkish border. Another 40 refugees, who were deported from Türkiye to Syrian territory as part of a "voluntary return", crossed the Tel Abyad region controlled by Turkish forces. Some of them tried to reach relatives in Al-Raqqah, Manbij and Ain Issa in areas controlled by the Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF), while others stayed on the streets of Ain Issa as they had difficulties reaching their homes in areas controlled by regime forces. The authorities allegedly forced the deportees to sign a document of voluntary return and imposed a fine of TYR 250 (approx. EUR 8.80, as of 03.07.23) per person, after which the deportees were handed over to the military police.

Another 90 of the deported refugees, who held the temporary protection card "Kimlik", were reportedly forcibly deported on 01.07.23 via the Bab Al-Salam border crossing to the town of Azaz in the area of the Turkish military operation Euphrates Shield, which is under the control of the Turkish armed forces. The authorities said that refugees had been deported because they failed to complete the documents required for residence and were not in possession of identity papers.

As of 30.04.23, 28 women journalists are imprisoned in Iran, 19 in Türkiye and 15 in China, according to the report.

Forced deportations to Syria

On 15.07.23 it was reported that the Turkish authorities deported at least 160 Syrian refugees from their territory to the Syrian area of Tel Abyad in the outskirts of Raqqa, which are controlled by the Turkish military. According to media reports, the refugees were brought to the area via the Al-Terwaziyah line under the pretext of "voluntary return"; according to the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights (SOHR), this raises concerns about a possible demographic change in the region. The deportations are said to have been carried out with the use of force. Some of the deportees are said to face immediate arrest by Turkish-backed groups upon arrival in northern Syria. The reasons for this are unknown, the reports said. In addition, SOHR reported that on 14.07.23 that Turkish authorities deported at least 45 Syrian refugees via the al-Hamam border crossing in the Jindires region to the area of the Turkish military offensive "Operation Olive Branch". Interior Minister Ali Yerlikaya announced on Twitter that the perpetrator had been arrested and a criminal investigation had been opened.

Halef Yilmaz, the party's deputy leader, said on Twitter that there was a "dirty drug trade" in Adana and called on the authorities to track down those behind the attack.

Decree on the compulsory return of Syrian refugees from Istanbul

On 29.07.23, the Turkish Migration Authority published a decree stating that Syrian nationals currently residing in Istanbul who have been granted temporary protection in Türkiye after their registration in other Turkish provinces, must return to those areas by 24.09.23. The decree also says that Syrian nationals who register with the migration authority before this date will receive a travel permit allowing them to return to the respective Turkish provinces. Syrians who fled the provinces where they are registered because of the earthquake in Türkiye and Syria on 06.02.23 and have received a travel permit allowing them to stay in Istanbul, are exempt from this decision. According to media reports, the Turkish authorities' decree came amid an ongoing wave of deportations targeting Syrian refugees, accompanied by increasing xenophobia and racism against Syrian nationals. There are more than 3.7 million Syrian refugees living in Türkiye, most of whom have not been granted refugee status but temporary protection. Their freedom of movement in Türkiye is thereby restricted and the authorities may deport them to Syria at any time. Istanbul is home to over 500,000 Syrian refugees, more than in any other Turkish city.

Of those temporarily arrested, 121 were released after being held in police buses for up to 10 hours. According to HRW, police used tear gas, cornered participants on the street during the protest and used excessive force to prevent them from leaving. At the police station, police officers allegedly denied legal representatives access to their clients for hours and verbally and physically abused lawyers. At the request of the Istanbul Court's Terrorism and Organised Crime Prosecution Department, the 2nd Criminal Court ruled that six of those arrested should be remanded in custody on suspicion of violating the Law on Assembly and Demonstration (Law No. 2911) and resisting arrest, and that three others should be released on conditions including reporting requirements and bans on leaving the country. The rest of those arrested were released.

The commercial entitled "Stop LGBT propaganda", was created by the Istanbul Family Foundation. The police used force against the protesters and took ten of them to a police station. The arrested persons were released from custody in the evening of 12.09.23.

The Izmir Governor's Office had banned LGBTIQ protests, citing public safety. The office stated that protesters are acting "against morality" in such protests, thereby inviting attacks from radical groups or people with opposing views and would therefore endanger public safety.

On 03.11.23 HRW published a report on civilian casualties during the military operations from 05.10. to 10.10.23 against PKK and YPG members in Syria and called on Türkiye to launch an investigation.

HRW claims that Turkish drone attacks killed at least eleven civilians and injured many. HRW accuses the Turkish military of failing to undertake any precautions to avoid civilian casualties. Türkiye launched a bombing campaign in northern Iraq and north-eastern Syria on 05.10.23 after the PKK claimed responsibility for a bomb attack near government buildings in Ankara in which two police officers were injured. Turkish authorities have alleged that the attackers had been trained in Syria. The Kurdish authority has rejected this claim, stating that dozens of people, including security staff and civilians, were killed in the Turkish attacks.

Two journalists, Tolga Şardan and Dinçer Gökçe, were arrested separately on 01.11.23 and charged with “spreading false information”. While Gökçe and Erdiñ were conditionally released after a short time, Şardan is still in custody. The investigations into Şardan were initiated by the chief public prosecutor’s office in connection with his news comment on an alleged report by the MİT news agency which is said to have been presented to president Erdoğan. The report allegedly contains findings relating to accusations of corruption in the judiciary. The public prosecutor’s office classifies this as “misleading information”.

11 December 2023

Constitutional court verdict against Article 220/6 of the Turkish criminal code

On 08.12.23 the Turkish constitutional court annulled Article 220/6 of the Turkish criminal code. The article concerned is a controversial law which punishes people for committing offences on behalf of an organisation without them actually having to be a member of the organisation concerned. The court stated that it had reached its decision due to the law’s vague wording, resulting in provisions which do not prevent arbitrary application by the authorities. The constitutional court stated that the law’s vagueness led to broad interpretation which compromised fundamental rights such as freedom of speech, freedom of assembly and freedom of association, as well as religious freedom and freedom of conscience. The court consequently found the law to be incompatible with the country’s constitutional principles. The verdict is to take effect in April 2024.

Article 220 of the Turkish criminal code, which concerns the formation of an organisation to commit criminal offences, stipulates a prison sentence of four to eight years for persons who found or lead a criminal organisation or who are members of such an organisation. Article 220/6 also stipulates punishment for non-members who “commit criminal offences on behalf of an organisation”, however. It states that persons who commit criminal offences on behalf of an armed organisation without being a member of such organisation are also punishable for membership, albeit with the option of reducing the penalty for membership by half.

The court’s assessment led to a unanimous decision by the judges to annul the provision. In the period prior to the law entering into force, the Turkish parliament has a limited period in which to enact a law which meets the criteria stipulated by the court.

In its Işıkırık verdict of 2017, the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR) had previously ruled that Article 220/6 of the Turkish criminal code was unforeseeable and not in compliance with the given legal standards. The ECHR emphasized that the vague wording and the broad application of the law did not provide adequate protection against arbitrary interference by the authorities.
